From the Desk of Rabbi Marmon

The summer is a quiet time on the Jewish ritual calendar. This is no surprise for a Levantine culture that predates air conditioning by several millennia. The main ritual event of summer is the three weeks of mourning the destruction of the Temple, known as בין המצרים (bein ha-m'tzarim, "Between the Straits"), which are observed from the 17th of Tammuz (anniversary of the Babylonian Nebuchadnezzar's breaching of Jerusalem's walls) to the 9th of Av (anniversary of the destruction both of the First Temple by the Babylonians in 586 BCE and of the Second Temple by the Romans in 70 CE). This year, those two dates will fall on Shabbat, so the fasting and other observances will be postponed to the following Sunday, which correspond to the 17th of July and 7th of August, respectively. The former is a daylight fast, while the latter is a full 24 hour fast. Of course, the Jewish calendar also predates the modern school calendar and the concept of summer vacation, so the sense of mourning between those two dates is often limited to certain ritual particulars such as not scheduling weddings in that span.

A sign of the unique character of the Jewish People, and of the influence of our prophets, is found in the simple fact that Jewish tradition assigns blame for the Destruction(s), and the associated loss of life, loss of sovereignty, millennia of exile, and all the other repercussions of these events directly onto our own sins, particularly what we call שנאת חנם (sin'at chinam, "free," baseless hatred of one another). Think how unusual this is! When the German volk suffered calamity in and after the First World War, they blamed Jews, Gypsies, communists – anyone and everyone but themselves – and made those people pay in blood. When the Palestinians suffered what they term "catastrophe," they blamed Israel, deciding that violent retribution was more valuable than building a healthy civil society of their own, and that this made not only Israelis but Jews anywhere in the world appropriate targets for that retribution. When White Nationalists in this country see their cultural influence declining, they take to the streets chanting "Jews will not replace us."

Desk of Sid

The work continues at our cemetery and little by little the area continues to look better. The cemetery committee is working to see that all areas needing attention get it. It's not an easy job. This is an ongoing effort. When you look at the grounds you see improvements. It's our job to see that this cemetery continues to look good and it will. Thank you all for your help.

25 Questions for a Jewish Mother Sunday, July 10 at 1 p.m. and 4 p.m.

Part memoir and part stand-up routine, this hilarious and affecting play breaks down what makes Jewish mothers so lamentable, laughable, and lovable. Comedienne Judy Gold, and playwright Kate Moira Ryan seamlessly weave actual interviews with Jewish mothers across the United States together with memories from Gold's childhood and her own experiences as a Jewish mother, in order to create a performance piece that explores it all - from rugelach to rabbis, matzoh to marriage, Ann Landers to Anne Frank and guilt to G-d.

David Friedmann - Lost and Found Portraits of the Prague Jewish Community 1940-1941 Tuesday, August 30 at 7 p.m.

David Friedman(n), 1893–1980, was an accomplished painter, renowned for his portraits drawn from life, and a leading Berlin press artist of the 1920s. As a refugee in Prague, he produced portraits of the Jewish Community during the Nazi occupation. Numerous subjects were prominent Zionists, who became heads of Theresienstadt Ghetto and murdered in Auschwitz. One of the starkest traumas of the Holocaust—people not only lost their lives, but also traces of their existence. The portraits were evidence of a dynamic Jewish community that had been destroyed.

His daughter Miriam Friedman Morris will discuss finding his lost portraits and the surprising connections she made piecing together the story. As a Holocaust survivor, Friedman fought anti-Semitism and racial hatred through painting the horrors he witnessed in the Lodz Ghetto and Auschwitz to show them to the world. His works are held in museum collections including the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum and on view in the permanent display at The Holocaust History Museum - Yad Vashem in Jerusalem.

Ok, so far it seems our tradition is in good company in blaming the Jews for our problems, but even though we are the world's favorite scapegoat, there are any number of examples we could choose of people finding a way to blame someone "other" for their problems, even when their "other" is not the Jews. It is truly rare to see a culture say, "even if an outside power was the instrument of our downfall, the fault lies ultimately with us." Most importantly, it is only when we hold ourselves and our own failings accountable for our problems, in whole or in part, that we can learn, grow, change, and become better through the experience of our own suffering and the exposure of our own flaws. If we are always sure that, no matter what we did, someone else is always to blame for our problems, then all we can do is take revenge and spread suffering around; we can't diminish our own suffering or anyone else's.

The three weeks between the straits also begin a ten week countdown to the High Holy Days, when we will focus on very similar issues, but on the personal scale. In most times, I would say that the summer mourning observance gives us a chance to get a head start on our personal work of חשבון הנפש (cheshbon ha-nefesh, introspection) in preparation for the Days of Awe. Lately, it seems to me it is well we take this time to focus distinctly on holding ourselves and our own groups accountable to grow from our mistakes, rather than blame and punish everyone but ourselves, on the national and international scales as well. May this message of our tradition of summertime mourning permeate the halls of power and influence in Washington and New York, in Hollywood and Silicon Valley, in Jerusalem and Ramallah and Gaza and Tehran, in Moscow and Kyiv, in Beijing and Taipei, in Pyongyang and Seoul, and... you get the idea.

P.S. This is not to suggest we should not fight or protect ourselves from someone who would do us harm, on the collective or personal level. Rather, that alongside that, we should consider our own actions and choices, and how they may have helped expose us to that harmful intent.
